

Activity 1a

Sound Differences in Cree-Innu

The Algonquian language family is made up of many Aboriginal languages found in North America such as Cree, Innu, Ojibwe and Micmac. The mother language is called Proto-Algonquian. The daughter languages have themselves many children called dialects. The Linguistic Atlas website, www.atlas-ling.ca illustrates many of the languages and dialects of Cree-Innu. These languages make up a continuum of dialects that change slightly from one to the next. The original ‘r’ sound in the mother language has changed over time into the sounds that can be heard in the different daughter languages. For example, in Plains Cree this ‘r’ sound has changed to ‘y’ but in Woodland Cree it has become ‘th’. Notice the ‘l’ sound in the Pessamit dialect of Innu even though it is spelled with ‘n’ in the standard Innu orthography.
